THE APPLE TREE GANG

In February 1888, a Scottish sportsman named John Reid and several of his friends took an armful of clubs, some gutta percha balls and hearts full of enthusiasm to a pasture in Yonkers for a friendly round of "Gowf". There, in front of a gallery of bemused cows, they knocked the balls around an improvised three-hole course.

Before long, these golfing pioneers had commandeered their own "clubhouse"—an old apple tree from whose gnarled branches they hung their coats and obligatory flasks of fine scotch whiskey.

This was the birth of what was to become the oldest continuously operating golf club in the United States:

The Saint Andrew's Golf Club.
